

Metin Gurani
Born September 1986

Metin Gürani is a Turkish/Syrian political affairs and institutional relations professional with experience in civil society, international relations, political analysis, institutional engagement, and regional affairs. His work focuses on building and strengthening strategic relationships between political actors, civil society organizations, academic institutions, and international stakeholders, with a particular focus on the Middle East, North Africa, and Turkey.

Throughout his professional and civil society engagement, Gürani has developed experience in political dialogue, partnership building, organizational development, peacebuilding, and conflict resolution. His areas of interest include fostering communication and constructive engagement between diverse stakeholders, particularly in politically sensitive and conflict-affected environments. He is particularly interested in initiatives that promote dialogue, mutual understanding, cooperation, and sustainable approaches to conflict and political challenges.

Gürani has also been actively involved in civil society and organizational initiatives. He is the founder and former president of a civil society association focused on education and development, where he contributed to the development and implementation of initiatives aimed at supporting communities and promoting social and educational development.

His professional interests extend to political transformation, international relations, regional dynamics, and the relationship between political ideas and contemporary political developments. Through his work and academic research, he seeks to contribute to a deeper understanding of political and social challenges and to support dialogue-based approaches to addressing complex regional issues.

Gürani is currently pursuing a PhD in Political Thought. He works in Arabic, Turkish, and English and continues to develop professional and institutional networks across the Middle East, North Africa, and Turkey.
